

Greenberg Glusker congratulates
Aaron J. Moss on being named a Top California Intellectual Property Lawyer

August 23, 2016

Greenberg Glusker's head of litigation Aaron Moss has been named to the Daily Journal's 2016 list of "Top Intellectual Property Lawyers in California," marking the sixth year in a row Aaron has earned this honor.

Aaron focuses his practice on intellectual property matters involving copyrights and trademarks in motion pictures, books, fictional characters and other creative works. The Daily Journal highlighted Aaron's ongoing work representing the Ray Charles Foundation, a charitable organization and the sole beneficiary of Charles' estate, in a lawsuit challenging copyright termination notices filed by the late musician's children. The Foundation is contesting defendants' attempts to recapture rights in dozens of musical compositions written by Charles in the 1950s. The Foundation contends that the termination notices are invalid, and that it is entitled to continue to receive royalties from exploitation of the compositions, as Charles intended.

As Aaron noted in the attached Daily Journal profile, "Anytime you have a case in which pretty much all of the witnesses are deceased and the documents are 50 years old, there are a lot of potential pitfalls. It is extremely interesting to go back into history."

In a case that is scheduled for a May 2017 trial, Aaron's goal is "to prevent the disappearance of a revenue stream going to [the] charity."
